Gastroenterologist

Dr Tamara Mogilevski

MBBS(hons), FRACP, PhD

LANGUAGES: English, Russian

Dr Tamara Mogilevski is a gastroenterologist who combines a public appointment at The Royal Melbourne Hospital and private practice at The Melbourne Gut Clinic in East Melbourne.

She completed her undergraduate training at The University of Melbourne – graduating with honours in 2011. She completed her post graduate training at the Austin, Northern and Alfred Hospitals and subsequently went on to consolidate her Inflammatory Bowel Disease training at the world-famous Royal London Hospital during an 18 month fellowship in the United Kingdom. During this time, she further consolidated her endoscopy skills at The Royal Free Hospital in London.

On her return from the UK she completed her PhD which focused on the utility of intestinal permeability measurements and the use of vagal nerve stimulation in IBD. Dr Mogilevski was awarded multiple research scholarships including the prestigious postgraduate NHMRC scholarship to complete her postgraduate studies. Dr Mogilevski maintains a keen interest in research, student supervision and education and is currently serving as an elected member of the GESA Inflammatory Bowel Disease executive committee.

She is experienced in all aspects of gastroenterology including the investigation of iron deficiency, screening and surveillance of polyps, polyposis syndromes and colorectal cancer surveillance, gastrointestinal bleeding, coeliac disease and liver disease.

She is always happy to discuss cases with her GP colleagues and welcomes open access endoscopy referrals to expedite endoscopy access for patients.

Outside of work Tamara enjoys spending time with her young family and friends, trail running, Pilates and hanging out at the beach.
